"It seems like Dan and I are metaphysical aura-trash projectors," says Joe, anchored by a pithy, feral expression, which looks beyond objects — as though he is channeling his description from a source outside of fractaled self-consciousness.

"It seems like our music mostly emits from our eyes but masked by our... what is that word? What is it when you're really uncoordinated?"

While Joe himself is not verbally remiss, his articulative powers — remarkably strong — rely on a fluidity that can at times defy lingual convention, in favor of abstraction. He finds the word he was looking for, which is strangely obvious:

"...clumsy. Clumsy. Clumsy instrument juggling juggles."

THE MUSIC OF PREGNANT AND ZECKI AM SUN

by Alexa Shapiro

Dan, who answers via telephone, is at first reluctant to explain what his music is about. He offers, with vagueness uncharacteristic to him, "it's light... lighthearted... I don't know." He seems suspicious of my intentions, but soon sucks away into a charming wave of glossolalia.

"Dotchikarima. Ochikarima-sensation. Sensation. Don't you see? We're all living in the dotchikarima. Sensation. Sensation."

The impetus of word-chaos excites the wave into finding its ocean, and he continues:

"It's about rainbows, boners, goats, waterfalls, eyelashes, rocks, dirt, pine needles, needles, eyeglasses, sore throats, curly hair, straight hair, straight or gay, CD rainbow reflections, universal temples, happiness, sadness, eternity, bathtubs, yarn, mermaids, dolphins, the color blue... red, purple, light shades of yellow... Alexa, Joe, Daniel, Andy.... no. No, no, no, stop. I'm done."

There is a silence, and Joe turns off the speaker on his phone. I can only hear one end of the conversation, now. Joe seems to have realized that Dan has one more thing to add. He turns the speaker back on. Dan's gnomish voice gurgles sweetly from the other side, and adds one more influence to his list:

"...love!"

Pregnant & zecki am sun use computers, guitars and their minds to create electronic compositions that explore the nature of the spirit. They take a break from the capital city to tour the Pacific Northwest this month.
